This course explores the politics and human rights implications of regulating contemporary global supply chains. Topics covered include: official regulatory frameworks; non-regulatory approaches to rule-making (such as voluntary corporate codes of conduct and industry standards); and social responses to the dilemmas of “ethical” sourcing of goods and services.
Open to Political Science majors or Human Rights Majors/Minors; Juniors and above.

37. RATIONALE FOR ACTION REQUESTED

a) This new course adds to the content of both Political Science & Human Rights course offerings. It will enhance, in particular, in the development of the newly created Human Rights Major by expanding the offerings on labor rights.

b) Not applicable

c) The enrollment restrictions (i.e., to Political Science majors and to Human Rights Majors/Minors at the junior or above level) are intended to ensure that all students in this highly interdisciplinary, upper-level undergraduate seminar have the capacity to engage in focused discussion and specialized writing on the topic.

d) Effect on other departments: none.

e) Amount of overlap with existing courses: none.

f) Other departments consulted: ANTH, SOC, ECON, HRTS, Public Policy

g) Effects on regional campuses: none.

h) Specific costs approved by dean: none.

i) Rationale for cross-listing:
This course contributes both to the offerings of the Comparative Politics subfield within Political Science and to the Human Rights Major/Minor, specifically in the area of labor rights. The faculty member who has developed the course is a joint-appointee of both units.

j) Rationale for offering as experimental course: none.

39. Course Information: ALL General Education courses, including W and Q courses, MUST answer this question

a. GOALS & LEARNING OBJECTIVES: The aim of this course is to expose students to the interdisciplinary literature on supply chain management in globalized production, along with more general literatures on comparative political economy and labor rights. Students will gain mastery of scholarly writing by producing a 20-page term paper on a specific good or service, tracing its production from point of origin to point of consumption. In so doing, they will learn to identify regulatory frameworks at the national, regional, and international level, along with relevant institutional structures. They will also engage in a process of critically analyzing the human rights implications of globalized production in multiple sectors.
b. COURSE REQUIREMENTS: Students are required to read roughly 100 pages of scholarly material per week; the syllabus contains a mixture of refereed journal articles, excerpts from books, online content, and at least two books assigned to be read entirely. Students are also required to conduct independent research and to produce a 20 page term paper, drawing on at least 20 sources apart from those included in the syllabus. Course participation is also graded: students serve as discussion leaders (i.e., one pair of students per course session) over the course of the semester; all students must participate in a "mini-conference" organized over the final week of class; and there are at least two class sessions devoted to peer review of the evolving research papers.

c. MAJOR THEMES, ETC. The course covers the theory of global supply chain evolution and management. It also covers comparative political economy; human rights law and institutions related to labor rights; and social movement theory in conjunction with varied forms of social response to labor rights abuse (e.g., consumer boycotts; ethical consumption; popular protests, etc.).

d. Not applicable.

Competency area: W

A key objective of this course is to teach students to write scholarly research papers and to engage in high-level group oriented learning activities. Students are required to produce a 20 page term paper, which is produced in graded segments over the course of the semester. Instructor feedback on each portion of the paper is extensive. The segments of the paper are divided and graded as follows: topic statement (2.5% of final grade); abstract, outline, working bibliography (2.5%); first draft (15%); second draft (20%); final draft (45%). Students are also taught how to engage in "peer review" and critique; specialized pedagogical materials are provided and in-class coaching is extensive. Students work in small groups by theme (i.e., in line with their paper topics) extensively over the course of the semester -- not only in the course of peer review exercises but also as co-panelists in a mini-conference that all students take part in during the final week of class. The instructor draws on staff of the Writing...
Center and UConn Libraries in order to enhance in-class instruction in the fundamentals of writing and scholarly research skills.

POLITICAL ISSUES:

POLITICS AND HUMAN RIGHTS IN GLOBAL SUPPLY CHAINS

Prof. Shareen Hertel

This course explores the politics and human rights implications of regulating contemporary global supply chains. It focuses, in particular, on manufacturing and agriculture. The course analyzes official regulatory frameworks (i.e., international, regional, and national institutions) as well as non-regulatory approaches to rule-making, such as voluntary corporate codes of conduct and industry standards. Finally, the course analyzes a range of social responses to the dilemmas of “ethical” sourcing of goods and services. Designed for upper level undergraduate students with a solid grounding in international relations and comparative politics, this is a writing-intensive course.

All students who enroll in this course are assumed to have read the Academic Misconduct section of the Student Conduct Code regarding such matters as plagiarism and cheating on examinations. If there are any students in this class who have special needs because of learning disabilities or other kinds of disabilities, please discuss these with the professor and Center for Students with Disabilities within the first week of class.
Logistics: The following books will be read entirely for the course are available for purchase at the UConn Co-Op:

All other readings for the course are available through HUSKYCT.

Requirements:

1) A final research paper (20 pages, not including bibliography) will be due on the last day of class, no extensions. The following are deadlines for key elements of the paper:

   - February 3: one paragraph “topic statement” due at the BEGINNING of class
   - February 20: abstract, outline, working bibliography due at the BEGINNING of class
   - March 26: first draft of papers due at the BEGINNING of class
   - April 2: second draft of papers due at the BEGINNING of class
   - April 27: final draft of papers due at the BEGINNING of class

These are firm deadlines; there are NO extensions. Students should focus the paper on a specific product or industry and related institutional and regulatory dilemmas. The paper should combine theory and empirical materials; it should be based on scholarly sources.

2) A “mini-conference” will be held during the last three sessions of class; students are expected to prepare individual conference presentation (5 minutes long) using multi-media and/or handouts, focused on their paper topic. Students will be divided into panels and will present in succession; the instructor will assign panels based on the topics chosen by students. Class discussion will follow each panel. Participation in this in-class conference is mandatory and should be taken seriously; your course participation grade is derived, in part, from your participation in the conference.

3) Weekly discussion questions: The professor will post weekly study questions on HUSKYCT; please use these to prepare for class. Your class participation grade will derive, in part, from your engagement in discussion around these questions.
